About This Game

Yi and the Thousand Moons is a short video game musical written and developed by David Su. Through the course of several original interactive songs, featuring a full cast and live band, the game weaves a story of the archer Yi's journey to save her village.

Darkness is expanding, and the gods plan to combat it by harvesting moonlight. They want the legendary archer Yi to shoot the moons down, but the villagers have warned her that the moons are what protect the earth from stardust. Help Yi rescue her village from catastrophe!

Features

- A unique interactive musical experience in which all the levels are songs to be played through (in both senses of the word!)
- Seven original songs and six preludes composed by David Su, starring a full cast and live band
- Play as Yi, a legendary archer who has been commanded by the gods to shoot down all of the moons
- Enter a world in which all your interactions with characters occur through music

Starring:

Dominique Star as Yi
Laila Smith as Villager Qing
Magnus Ferguson as Villager Wen
Reid Jenkins as Villager Zhi
Wesley Kwok as God Shui

Two moons shot down

A very short and technically simple musical experience that is worth inspection by anyone curious. The game tries several things with the music and how it connects to the game, and plays with interactivity and simple cutscenes to good effect.

The music does a lot of the heavy lifting here. It's very good and broadly likable by most. The production quality on the sound is generally very high. The music is so good, it makes me less critical of the extremely simple graphics (which are less cool lo-fi and more low budget). Through some of the more cinematic camera motions you can imagine this game being a sight to behold with a larger financial backing.

As it stands, this is a very worthwhile curiosity to anyone who likes experimentation in games and wants to see more gaming musicals in general.
